Unsung Women of the Bible by Deacon Tessa Bennett
The Woman at the Well - John 4:1-42

Dear SIA readers,

I have thoroughly enjoyed sharing this series of Unsung Women with you. This month's final piece ends with a woman whose name we don't know.

Throughout this series, we have revisited women whose stories deserve attention; women whose experiences, decisions, courage, pain, faith and resilience remind us that we too can draw on similar strengths and overcome the challenges life brings.

For my final segment, I reintroduce you to the woman at the well. We know her by her nationality and aspects of her relationship history, but not by her name. So, what makes her story so significant?

She was the woman society labelled, but Jesus engaged.

Jesus crossed cultural and religious boundaries to speak with her. He did not allow society's divisions to determine who was worthy of His attention. How often do we reduce women to labels without taking the time to understand their stories?

She was the woman whose history did not disqualify her from an encounter.

Jesus knew her story before she told it, yet still chose to engage with her. We don't know the circumstances surrounding her previous marriages, but we do know that her history did not prevent her from encountering Jesus. Her past was part of her story, but it was not the limit of what God could do in her life.

She was the woman who wasn't afraid to ask questions.

She questioned, explored and engaged in a conversation about worship and faith. Jesus revealed Himself to her as the Messiah. Women, never underestimate your voice, your curiosity or your capacity to engage with truth.

She was the woman who became an evangelist.

She left her water jar and returned to the town to tell others about Jesus. She held no religious title, but she carried a testimony that brought others to encounter Him. Her past did not silence her; her encounter gave her a message worth sharing.

As we leave 2026 and enter 2027, let's ask ourselves: What are we carrying that needs to be left at the well? What wisdom have we gained that deserves to come with us? Carry the wisdom, release the shame and embrace new possibilities as you continue to grow in faith.

And, sister, keep this in view: Jesus knows your story and still chooses to engage with you. You're precious to Him.
